Public Safety Center Update

Architectural design work is complete for the Public Safety Operations and Training Center on D.B. Wood Road. The planned facility, next to the newly opened Fire Station 5, will be the home for Georgetown Fire Department administration and the Georgetown Police Department. The two-level, 75,000 square-foot building also will house emergency communications, emergency operations, and evidence processing and storage. The site also will include a firing range, indoor training building, and obstacle training course.

The center was designed by Architects Design Group in association with KAHickman Architects. Bartlett Cocke, the general contractor, expects to begin construction in the spring of 2013 with completion in the summer of 2014.

Georgetown voters approved funding for the facility in a bond election in May 2011.

Georgetown Swirl Wins Statewide Award

The Georgetown Swirl was named a winner of the Best Promotional Event by the Texas Downtown Association at their annual meeting in November. The Georgetown Swirl is an annual food, wine, and shopping event on the downtown Square sponsored by the Georgetown Main Street Program.

downtown or commercial district promotional events. Judges thought the Swirl was a comprehensive event that achieved many goals by encouraging support of local restaurants and retail businesses as well as regional wineries.

The 2013 Georgetown Swirl will be held on Saturday, March 2. For details, go to swirl.georgetown.org. Online ticket sales started in December.

Art Center Plans for Spring Opening

Work is progressing on the Art Center in the first floor of the historic Fire Station and City Hall building at 816 S. Main Street. The new Art Center, which will include gallery space and a studio area, will be run by volunteers organized by the nonprofit Georgetown Art Works.

Designs for the Art Center exterior and corner plaza, by architect Gary Wang, were approved by the Historic and Architectural Review Commission in November. Demolition of interior walls was completed in October. Relocation of utility lines in front of the building was completed in November.

Construction of new expanded sidewalks will allow for outdoor café seating for ThunderCloud Subs, which will be next to the Art Center in the former fire truck bay building. The sub shop also is expected to open in the spring.

Interior construction on the Art Center and work on an outdoor plaza and splash pad is the next step. The Art Center is scheduled for a spring opening.

Andrew Spurgin started in October as the City's new planning director. Spurgin comes to Georgetown from the City of San Antonio where he was a planning manager in the development services department. Spurgin's experience includes managing planning staff, development code changes, working with zoning and board of adjustment commissions, and working on redevelopment plans.

Spurgin grew up in Austin and has a bachelor's degree in metropolitan studies from New York University. He earned a master's degree in community and regional planning from The University of Texas at Austin.
